Research Fellow

Expertise: Modern Japanese military, naval, and imperial history

A Hoover fellow since 1993, Mark Peattie is a professor emeritus in history at the University of Massachusetts, Boston. A former officer in the U.S. Foreign Service (U.S. Information Agency), Peattie holds a Ph.D. in modern Japanese history from Princeton University. He is the author, coauthor, or coeditor of eight books, including the award-winning Kaigun: Strategy, Tactics, and Technology in the Imperial Japanese Navy, 1887–1941 (1997), coauthored with the late David Evans; three volumes on Japanese imperialism, coedited with Hoover fellow Ramon Myers; and Sunburst: The Rise of Japanese Naval Air Power, 1909–1941 (2002). He is currently working on a manuscript on the Japanese experience in Southeast Asia in the twentieth century. He is also organizing an international conference on Japan's war in China, 1937–1945, to be held in 2004 and sponsored by the Asia Center at Harvard University.
