

Acknowledgments

A book such as this does not get into print—and a conference such as the one these papers and presentations reflect does not occur, let alone run smoothly—without the diligence of many talented people. We owe a debt of gratitude and would like to especially acknowledge the participants in the conference whose papers, presentations, and discussions are included in this volume. Each approached their role with seriousness and candor and contributed to a spirited and insightful series of panel discussions. Each also graciously spent time advising us as we planned the conference content. That the people who have been among the leaders responsible for our nation's security on the one hand, and its scholarly evaluation on the other, invested so much time and effort in this project was more than ample recompense for our work in bringing them together. Special thanks go to Hoover senior fellow John Cogan, who helped us conceptualize this effort from the beginning and was a valuable guiding hand throughout. The idea for and development of this project trace back to discussions between the late George P. Shultz and virtually all of those contributing to this book, as well as several cohorts of Hoover's national security affairs fellows and many others, among them Bill Perry, Brad Carson, Ash Carter, Jimmy Panetta, Colin Powell, Jim Ellis, Bill Inglee, and James M. Cunningham, each of whom generously shared their time, experience, knowledge, and insights.

This project benefited from the research assistance of two Hoover Institution student fellows, James Burns and Trenton Hicks, who ably combed through reams of Pentagon, Office of Management and Budget, and Congressional Budget Office data to help us tell a cogent story about the Department of Defense budget—and necessary reforms.

The staff at Hoover covered every detail of the conference and publication, from facilities and catering to sound, high-quality large-screen videoconferencing connectivity, substantive note-taking, audiovisual recording, transcription, copyediting, and book production, all superbly. Included in alphabetical order are: Barbara Arellano, Andrew Engle, Darin Evans, David Fedor, Lynette Garcia, Danica Michels Hodge, Claire Jaqua, Alison Law, Omar Marte, Jessica Martinez, LeAnn Racoma, Janet Smith, Aries Vitug, and Bill Walton. We would also like to thank Gayle Ronan for her superb copyediting expertise and Howie Severson for the engaging cover design.

Our deepest gratitude goes to Michael J. Boskin's executive, administrative, and research assistants, respectively, Kelli Nicholas, Jennie Tomasino, and Garrett Te Kolste, who helped ensure the conference and this volume proceeded on schedule and, limited only by academic norms and budget, with style.
