

I think what you all have to keep in mind is that it isn't just money supply and numbers. It's the way that what you do profoundly affects people's attitudes. In the labor case, it had a profound impact on the way people worked together with each other. And moral hazard happens everywhere. Intervention changes the situation. Many people say, "Hooray, the Fed saved the system," but I'm not so sure. I think a lot of serious mistakes were made.
