

Acknowledgments

I should like to extend my deepest gratitude to John Raisian, Director of the Hoover Institution, for his confidence and generosity in supporting this project. Florida was flooded with reporters during the Bush-Gore post-election battle, and it has been flooded since then with authors. Despite the crowd, my thinking was that there was a good short book to be written about the strategy and tactics of the side that ultimately prevailed in a battle that was like playing chess to a metronome. Whether I was right, the reader can judge. But without John's support, there would have been no project.

Thanks also to Associate Director Richard Sousa, who was always reachable, and always prompt to provide needed assistance.

I am grateful for the work of Patricia Baker, Executive Editor of the Hoover Press, and the staff at Publication Services in Champaign, Illinois, for highly professional editing under a rigorous deadline.

My daughter Eva, an associate producer with Fox News in Washington, and my daughter Marni, who graduated this past June from Dartmouth, provided both quick and professional research assistance. Maybe sending them to college wasn't such a bad idea after all.

Megan Cooley, one of my graduate students at Boston University, also provided research assistance, also under difficult deadline pressure, and at a time when she was a bit under the weather. I am deeply appreciative of her efforts.

Many of the lawyers, and a few normal people, who fought gallantly in Florida, gave freely of their time in sharing their recollections with me and enlightening me as to how the various Florida operations meshed, and sometimes mashed. There are too many to mention by name, but some will be obvious to the reader.

Because the thrust of this study was on the internal deliberations of the Bush strategists in Florida, I spent relatively little time with those on the other side. I would, however, like to extend my appreciation to John Hardin Young, a senior Gore operator and coauthor of The Recount Primer, a key instructional manual for the Gore forces. Mr. Young offered some candid comments when we spoke and also sent a copy of his hard-to-get primer.

Thanks also to Senator Joseph Lieberman, a man I have admired for years, who is justifiably held in the highest regard by those who know him best. We had an interesting chat about the campaign during a business trip to Europe, and I much look forward to his comments about this book.

Finally, my most sincere thanks to my Boston University students for putting up with their professor, who spent most of the past semester crashing on this project while carrying the traditional three-course schedule. I hope my evaluations didn't suffer. And it is to them that I should like to dedicate this book.
