

DAVID R. HENDERSON

Research Fellow

Expertise: Public policy, especially making economic issues and analyses clear and interesting to general audiences; health care policy

In addition to his Hoover appointment, David Henderson is on the economics faculty at the Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey, California. The holder of a Ph.D. in economics from the University of California, Los Angeles, he edited The Fortune Encyclopedia of Economics (1993), which communicates to a general audience what and how economists think. From 1997 to 2000, he was a monthly columnist for the Red Herring, an information technology magazine. His current research focuses on health care policy in the United States and Canada, as well as on the benefits of freedom and the unintended destruction caused by government regulation and spending. His most recent book is The Joy of Freedom: An Economist's Odyssey (2002).
