

THOMAS H. HENRIKSEN

Senior Fellow and Associate Director—Program Development

Expertise: U.S. foreign policy, international political and defense affairs, responses to “failed” and rogue states

Thomas Henriksen’s current research focuses on American foreign policy in the post–cold war world, with an emphasis on U.S. diplomatic and military courses of action toward terrorist havens such as Afghanistan under the Taliban and so-called rogue states, including North Korea, Iraq, and Iran. He also concentrates on armed and covert interventions abroad. He edited Foreign Policy for America’s Third Century: Alternative Perspectives (2001), which provides competing views on U.S. options around the world. Other recent publications include the monograph Using Power and Diplomacy to Deal with Rogue States (1999) and an edited volume, North Korea after Kim Il Sung (1997). The holder of a Ph.D. in history from Michigan State University, he is a trustee of the George C. Marshall Foundation and the International Conference Group on Portugal.
