William Ratliff has a Ph.D. in Latin American and Chinese histories from the University of Washington in Seattle. His most recent book, coauthored with Edgardo Buscaglia, is Law and Economics in Developing Countries (2000). Recent essays discuss the narco/guerrilla war and lack of governance in Colombia, as well as U.S. policy toward Cuba. His current research interests include U.S. policy toward China and Latin America and how traditional Latin American and Chinese beliefs, institutions, and other matters influence current governments and conditions in Latin America and China.
